"THE KNIGHTS OF TYBURN." Dear old Niblo's? It has been eating its heart out waiting for a nice, bristling melowith a picturesque regard for his imagina-tion could afford to overlook. It has yearned dramas, and none of your new-tangled affairs with gentlemanly villams in tan kid glovechiefs. Away with your nineteenth century blood and thunder! Long live "The Enights of Tyburn:" I am getting quite How Some "Evening World" Read-enthusiastic. The oder of peanuts is in my postrile. It intoxicates one for the mement. The Enights of Tylmrn," adapted from D'Ennery's "Chevaliers do Brouillard," over which the Parisians went wild there are no people fender of good melodrama at Niblo's. I don't think that I need torture my prophetic soul very much. The play will undoubtedly be a success at Nibio s. It is well place!, I have it the instant I come way Jack; I would have been willing to have all.

staked my hat on it as soon as I saw the monnlit Mint, the artistic mob, the pale wisite horse, and the mother's despair. It was an effective tablean. The boys upstairs went wild over it. They wanted to encore Mint, mob, white horse, mother's despair. Jack Sheppard is better known than that of more worthy youths, and D Ennery has used Harrison Amsworth's pavel conscientionsly enough, though the English version is trifle incoherent at times. The Jack of "The Knights of Tyburn," however, is wonderfully heroic. He is a very fiery, untamed young man, but the audience couldn't hate him under any circumstances. A theatrical gallery is compose tof hero-worshippers, and Jack Sheppard stands upon a pedestal from which nobody would dare to remove him His life in "The Knights of Tyburn" is deroted to making escapes. He does some very rash things, but nobody regrets the fact that he is pardoned at the end of the play and given a chance to be better. I

The play at Niblo's will need some pruning nature and its scenic beauties, it went remarkably well for a first night. I am no lover of meiodrama, but "The Knights of Tyburn" was a positive relief from the polite villaimes that have come to us from London such as "My Lack" and "My Lack" and "My Lack".

H. M. E. London-such as "My Jack" and "Master and Man," and plays of that ilk. Melodrama should be picture-que. It is always improbable, but it is much easier to accept than in the dress of the nineteenth century and in surroundings which we know.

We are interested in pictorial Jack, with his gay and commanding costome. His exploits seem historical and stirring. But who can tolerate a villain who has just stepped out of a Fifth avenue tailor's shop, and who, while he puts on his gloves, plots the burning of wills, the destruction of hoirs and a marriage with maiden in tears ? Give us our metodrama pictorially, I say, or stop it altogether.

Miss Clara Louise Thompson appeared as Jack Sheppard, and gave a performance in which she is entitled to much credit. For her incessant energy, perspiring andacity in age. and untiring good humor Miss Thompson ought to obtain her reward. She is a comely young woman, with a face that suggests the piquante Jansen.
